AHAF... Leading the Fight against Age-Related Disease Since 1973

Supporting: Alzheimer's Disease Research
 Macular Degeneration Research
 National Glaucoma Research

American Health Assistance Foundation (AHAF) is committed to finding the causes and cures of life altering and incurable age-related diseases that collectively affect over 17 million people in the US alone, and costs patients and their caregivers billions of dollars in healthcare expenses and lost wages. This number will only grow each year, and it will soon be difficult to find an American whose family is not impacted in some way by one of these diseases. Because of this, AHAF:

- has awarded over $110 million dollars in research grants to fight age-related diseases
- takes a broad, global perspective on research, pushing the limits of what is scientifically possible
- supports the ground-breaking, cutting edge work of over 1,200 research scientists worldwide including two Nobel Prize winners
- is an outstanding investment for donor dollars—each $100 donation to AHAF results in over $1,000 in future research funding for each AHAF grant recipient

Compassion for Today, a Cure for Tomorrow

AHAF also generates public awareness for age-related disease, and is passionate about providing patients, families, caregivers, and the public with resources about managing aging and age-related disease:
